Cold and snow in the mountains: Transalpine Run reaches Nauders. Grand finale tomorrow at Lake Reschen

After yesterday's short breather, the penultimate stage of the Dynafit Transalpine Run powered by Garmin was characterized by a mystical atmosphere with snow from 1500 meters and single-digit temperatures. The start was moved from Samnaun down into the Inn Valley to Martina. From there, the remaining 441 athletes ran an alternative route over 35 kilometers and 1960 vertical meters to Nauders.

Lukas Mangger from Italy and Julia Güthling from Germany continued their winning streak in the solo category; the overall victory should no longer be out of their reach. In the women's team classification, the two fastest teams crossed the finish line together today: the "Allgäu Outlet Racing Team" with Lena Glasbrenner and Johanna Steinmüller and "Die Sonnenblumen" with Rachel Marbaker from the USA and Sophie Kirkman from Zimbabwe. The Swiss flatlanders Ramon Gut and Tobias Schmid confidently maintained their lead as the fastest men's team.

The senior masters Anton Steiner and Frowin Stecher from Team Dynafit Vinschgau have been completing a sensational Transalpine Run race since day 1. Not only did they win the 6th stage in a row in their category, they were also the third fastest team overall today.

The final stage from Nauders to Lake Reschen will be shortened to 22 kilometers and 1200 meters of altitude, as it is expected to be very cold, wet and stormy.

The Transalpine Run has been held since 2005 and takes place over seven days on changing routes and spectacular trails over the main Alpine ridge.
